Disability, social policies and labour market

Students with available forms support for disabled people in Poland and the other European countries. The basic aim of the course is understanding social, economic and legal processes and getting their impact on chances disabled people in their labour market. The purpose is to identify factors which determine entrepreneurship among disabled people and to identify the specific nature of activity in this group. The group under study is more exposed to long-term unemployment than the total of unemployed, unless they decide to run own business. Longer and longer periods of job search, or repeated unsuccessful attempts to find job result in a feeling of rejection and later of isolation in society and unwillingness to work at all. Many examples in Poland and EU countries show that great solution for many people unemployed also disabled are getting funds for economic activity. The achievement of this purpose was possible thanks for comparing activity the population of people with disabilities in different countries in years 2008- 2017 taking into account the selected criteria and discuss.
